MAT IN THE ATTICA

Near to the sky my attic room
Looks out upen the serapers, where dapping lines of laundry bloom
And with the wide dist expers,
Some days the clouds, play hide and seek
In our and shadow ginneing.
And when the streets with rain are
I hear the drops a-dancing.

I know it's spring; I hear below
An organ's ragtime grinding.
And scanty coins I deflig throw
To ober the minstrel's winding.
Time up, 0 bard, my decoping acui
With music's magic manns,
The Tales from Hoffman barearolle;
For encore Rusticana.

Blossoming all together,
Vocal the day with bees.
Birds, and the breezy weather.
Happiness keen as pain
Lilts in the ringing rais.
Drips in the showery trees,
Lisping together.

Lyrical, too, art thou.

Blossoms of living beauty,
Rapture upon thy brow,
Joyousnass all the duty.
Sorrow may woo in value.
Seak thee in sun or rain—
Stab her with laughter now,
Slay her with beauty!

"War's Havoc," a Sensational and Spectacular Page from the History of the Civil War.

Another big film-novelty is the fea-ture at the Breed today and is enti-tled War's Havee. It deals with a young southern bride, whose husband is in the confoderate forces, encamp-ed near his old home. Word is re-ceived that hundreds of binecoats, leaded on flat cars, are on their way south. The bride heaps her husband posted and attempts to stall the fed-erals by outling off communication by telegraph, but the operator has sent enough of the message to serve his purpose. Thus thwarted, she takes her purpose. This thwarted, she takes her old Mammy Fanny, and goes to the railroad, and, at the point of revolution of the woods, and the engineer is made to drive the engine with the fwo women aboard.
